SHORT-LISTINGS & APPLIED ERC FUNDING

2018 University lecturer, University of Oulu, Cultural Anthropology, offered a permanent position (declined)

2017 Associate / Assistant Professorship of Social and Cultural Anthropology, tenure track, University of Helsinki. Among four shortlisted candidates. One evaluator 'highly supported' appointment, another one 'strongly supported' and placed first. Overall assessed to be at Associate Professor level.

2018 ERC STARTER GRANT APPLICATION 'WATERSHED OF REGIMES? A legal-anthropological study on limits of human rights' (host institution The Global Governance Centre, The Geneva Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies). Overall project assessment B, overall personal assessment 'Excellent'.

Excerpt of evaluation: This is an extremely interesting proposal to look at the tension between state-centric and private actor-centric approaches and what the implications are for human rights, and specifically for human rights to water. The researcher's academic track record, particularly what concerns publications output is outstanding. The PI is able to develop excellent research and definitely is able to go beyond the state of the art as evidenced by her academic track record.

*Project application: PI in project application titled '#deathbybreath: seeing and sensing toxic Delhi Air' (2019-2021) submitted to Kone Foundation in September 2018 (sought funding 278 500e, results in December 2018). Abstract:

For quite some time, Delhi has been known as the world's most polluted city. This project builds on an anthropological sensory approach to examine how residents make 'sense' of air-pollution, how they tackle, adapt and assess the effects and consequences of living in a city while breathing toxic air. It explores how these local embodied experiences contribute to making air pollution 'visible' as a 'wicked problem', both in bureaucracies and legislative initiatives at the local and international levels including human rights monitoring at the UN, particularly in comparison with quantified air pollution measurements. Via its multi-faceted ethnographic data including sensory ethnography and visual narratives especially on Instagram and online campaigns this project further examines how anthropologists and social scientists may contribute toward addressing the 'grand challenges' of the 21th century via their descriptive distinctness and particular 'fuzzy' qualitative knowledge.

PROJECT in development: WATERSHED OF REGIMES? A legal-anthropological study on limits of human rights. The project was submitted as an ERC Starter Grant project in 2018. The plan is to continue developing the project proposal, and submit parts of it to smaller funding instruments as well as the revised entity for the ERC Consolidator Grant and other major schemes. Abstract:*

Is the contemporary human rights regime still relevant, or has it faced its limits with the continued proliferation of non-state actors as key players in international standard-setting and implementation? Are we approaching a watershed of regimes, both for UN led human rights monitoring and for the state-centered arrangements of post-world war II international law and governance more generally? WATERSHED forms a pioneering legal-anthropological study of these questions, building on a multi-methodological approach that combines ethnographic fieldwork among corporate actors, NGO activists, state representatives and UN experts to the analysis of legal documents and policy outlines. It focuses on the discursive techniques, modes of persuasion as well as attempts at normative compliance that are resulting in new hybrid forms of 'lawlike' governance, challenging existing theoretizations and explanatory schemes. WATERSHED concretizes its query on the case study of the human right to water, examining how it is realized via public-private partnerships promoted by the UN Sustainable Development Guidelines (SDG) of 2015. Geographically WATERSHED anchors its inquiry on the axis of the 'Geneva hub', Finland, and South Africa, examining the notions of fear and crisis as well as hope and promise linked to water initiatives. Simultaneously WATERSHED traces the historic contours of the post-Cold war human rights phenomenon, center-periphery dynamics and current configurations of North-South relations. In particular, WATERSHED focuses on the recent shift that appears to have elevated corporate shareholders as the ultimate benefactors of human rights, instead of vulnerable groups around the world. How are UN state-centric monitoring mechanisms equipped to deal with this change? What does this shift mean: the transformation of human rights into tools for legitimating prevailing power interests, and thus their demise as tools for world improvement - or is there another way out?

APPENDIX 1

Teaching Portfolio

This teaching portfolio is structured around five themes: 1. Practical teaching experience and development of teaching skills, 2. Supervision experience, 3. Pedagogical vision and training, 4. Production of teaching material, 5. Other teaching qualifications. In addition, it outlines Miia Halme-Tuomisaari's teaching philosophy.

Teaching philosophy

Miia Halme-Tuomisaari firmly believes that universities hold one of the most significant roles in our societies in both socializing new generations of citizens and thus reproducing our communities, and for allowing us to gain a greater, more profound collective understanding of 'the now'. With this she refers not only the shared ability to analytically examine key components of our contemporary societies, but also the boldness to go beyond customary explanatory frames so as to allow for us to readjust our understanding of root causes of societal and global problems and their consequences. She is convinced that universities must remain organic sites in which not only new knowledge is produced, but also new modes of teaching, learning and reflecting. An all-encompassing infinite intellectual curiosity forms the backbone for her teaching philosophy, combined with incessant innovativeness of formats, whether embodied in the embrace of new social media platforms in her teaching; field visits; collaborative labs or the unexpected exchange in a customary classroom. Only via staying true to these elements, she considers, will universities remain vital contexts of learning, research and the general pursuit of knowledge and understanding, thus being also able to contribute to the solving of the most compelling challenges of today's world.

1. Practical teaching experience and development of teaching skills

Miia Halme-Tuomisaari has been teaching at university level since 2003, primarily at the Faculties of Law and Social Sciences of the University of Helsinki. In spring 2018 she worked as University Lecturer in Social and Cultural Anthropology at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Helsinki. In the spring 2017 expert evaluation for the tenure track professorship in Social and Cultural Anthropology, University of Helsinki, she was assessed as having reached the career stage of an Associate Professor. In 2016 she was appointed as docent (adjunct professor) in International Law at the University of Turku. For the appointment she was assessed to hold the required good teaching skills. In October 2018 she was appointed as Docent in Social and Cultural Anthropology, with the specialization of Legal Anthropology at the University of Jyväskylä. In September 2017 she has applied for docentship in Social and Cultural Anthropology at the University of Helsinki, and in February 2018 from the University of Jyväskylä; she gave the sample lecture for the appointment in August 2018 with good feedback. She has taught at the University of Turku in 2015-2016 and held numerous visiting lectures in Finland and internationally including the Geneva Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies, Humboldt University, University of Konstanz, The European Master's in Human Rights and Democratization (Venice, Italy) and the Åbo Akademi. She is accustomed to addressing inter-disciplinary audiences and her teaching is innately inter-disciplinary in nature.

Between 2003-2011 she taught between one to three annual courses of 14 to 20 hours at the University of Helsinki. Her teaching has been both at the bachelor and master's level, with some participation by doctoral candidates. Her students have included a mix of students from law, anthropology, other social sciences including sociology and social policy, and humanities. Her courses have alternated between small seminars to mid-size classes (30-40 participants) and large (100+) student audiences.

Her two most recurring courses have been

How to Write Academic Text*, 20-hour lecture course, LL.M-Program, Faculty of Law, University of Helsinki (2003-2011) (Master's level, language: English)

(Nordic) Human Rights in Legal and Anthropological Perspective*, 20-hour lecture course, Faculty of Law, University of Helsinki (2006-2011) (Bachelor & Master's level, language: English)

These courses have included, in addition to lecturing, homework assignments, essay supervision and evaluation, active student participation as well as individual feedback sessions. All course material and course syllabi were designed by Halme-Tuomisaari. The courses have utilized a range of teaching methods including discussions, student presentations and diverse online contexts such as creating interactive blogs and the interactive online pedagogical tool Flinga.

During the spring term 2018 she is teaching two courses at the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Helsinki

*Bachelor seminar in social and cultural anthropology. 5 op (26 hours). (Language: Finnish)

*Legal Anthropology: Ethnography of human rights, documents and the UN, 5 op (26 hours). (Language: Finnish)

In addition, as university lecturer she supervises and grades Bachelor and Master's thesis writing, marks exams and internship reports, as well as instructs students in individual consultations.

During the term 2016-2017 she has taught two courses at the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Helsinki

*2017 Central Themes in Social and Cultural Anthropology. 5 op (30 hours). (Language: English)

*2016 Anthropological Research Problems IV: Kinship/Persons. 10 op (26 hours). (Language: English)

She has further taught the following courses

2015-2016 The meaning of International law in a globalized world (Kansainvälisen oikeuden merkitys globalisaation aikakaudella, OTMU 2222), Master's level / syventävä kurssi (30h), Faculty of Law, University of Turku (Language: Finnish)

2010 Analysing and argumentation skills, 14 hours of lectures with Katri Havu in course Principles of legal thinking, Faculty of Law, University of Helsinki (Language: Finnish)

Her teaching has been regularly assessed by student evaluations since 2003. Feedback has been consistently very high, usually at level 4.5 / 5. In the Erik Castrén Institute Summer Seminar in 2010 – a two-week seminar that she designed, facilitated and held 3 lectures of 2 hours – her performance was assessed as being the second best of the six international lecturers who included numerous leading scholars in their field (et al Samuel Moyn and Stephen Hopgood). Overall her strength is the ability to address inter-disciplinary audiences and find approaches to challenging inter-disciplinary material that make it accessible to students at highly differing levels. To single out one particular student feedback: one participant of the course How to Write Academic Text received the highest grade laudatur for his thesis, and wrote back thanking warmly for the course, considering the course to have been directly responsible for the grade. In spring 2018 she gave a visiting lecture in the course 'Introduction to the Principles of Political Thought' at the Faculty of Social Sciences (course coordinator Emilia Palonen); the course included numerous renown visiting lecturers including Professor Kari Palonen. In the course student evaluations her lecture was singled out: out of 9 feedback forms received by April 2018, 7 mentioned her lecture in name praising it, one student calling it 'phenomenally good'.

2. Supervision experience

Miia Halme-Tuomisaari has been active in mentoring students in their thesis work since 2003 via her course How to Write Academic Text. The course was designed to help students learn how one produces academic texts in general as well as structures and realizes a thesis. The course also included the writing of a 'Mini-thesis' via which participants summarized their research plan and mapped out their planned sources, methodologies and theoretical approaches. Between the years 2003-2011 she mentored on average 15 students annually. In 2012-2014 she was a part of the 3-person follow-up group for doctoral candidate Freek van der Vet at the Alexander Institute of the University of Helsinki. Throughout the years she has also continually assisted and consulted phd candidates in her areas of expertise including the anthropology of human rights, the history of human rights and the anthropology of expertise.

Halme-Tuomisaari is very active in assisting and mentoring junior scholars, and has acted in a directorial role in numerous capacities. From 2007-2011 she oversaw the work of the editorial team for the Reviews section of Suomen antropologi: Journal of the Finnish Anthropological Society. Since 2009 she has been directing numerous research assistants at her different research projects, including two research assistants in her fieldwork at the UN Human Rights Committee and the compilation of documents at the Finnish Ministry of Foreign Affairs. She has also supervised research assistants for background research for UN Human Rights Committee documents, as well as analysis of archival data around the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Since 2014 she has supervised 5 interns via Allegra Lab & Allegra Lab Hki, including both research assignments and projects combining scholarship, art and science producing.

She is currently the PhD supervisor for two doctoral candidates: Ms. Emilia Laaksonen (with Martti Koskenniemi, Faculty of Law, University of Helsinki, 2017-) and Mr. Roman Urbanowitz (with Sarah Green, Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Helsinki, 2018-).

3. Pedagogical vision and training

Halme-Tuomisaari's pedagogical vision is summarized by the notion of situated learning, which was developed by Jean Levi and Etienne Wenger (CUP 1991). The notion builds on the concept of 'legitimate full participant', which means a participant in a community of experts who is fluent over all the skills that belong to this field. In the case of university students this means both skills as a researcher and those of a social scientist as well as a responsible citizen. More explicitly the notion of situated learning implies the aspiration to transgress the potential limitations of classroom settings, which may result in producing 'expert learners': individuals who become experts in adopting the knowledge that is disseminated by experts, but who will not acquire all the skills required of experts themselves. To reach this goal teaching contexts need to be diverse and build on multiple elements including active exchanges and discussion, both structured and open-ended student assignments as well as student presentations – in addition to traditional lecturing by the teacher. The goal is to activate students to become engaged participants in the learning process, and to assist them in setting targets for their own learning, thus facilitating them in incorporating learning situations.

Halme-Tuomisaari's pedagogical training is most strongly connected to her phd research which focussed explicitly on conceptions of learning and knowledge at a context of higher learning, more specifically the phd training sessions arranged by a Nordic network of human rights experts (Brill 2010). For this study she both conducted ethnographic research as a 'legitimate peripheral participant' in the network's events, as well as conducted interviews with participants and utilized numerous graphic illustrations. She also examined recent pedagogical work including research on the 'hidden pedagogies' of elementary teachers. She has since continued to actively develop her teaching skills by introducing new interactive components to her courses and experimenting with novel approaches that reflect recent introductions of different online tools and learning technologies.

4. Production of teaching material

Miia Halme-Tuomisaari has designed most of the course material for her classes independently, including course syllabi. This course material has included both reading lists as well as different in-class pedagogical material including slides and other supportive reference material. She is contemplating on writing a guide-book on thesis writing on the basis of her course 'How to Write Academic Text', and has had preliminary exchanges on the matter with editors of Cambridge University Press who published her latest book, co-edited with Pamela Slotte (Slotte & Halme-Tuomisaari, CUP 2015). There is interest among the editors, and she looks forward to proceeding with this plan.

5. Other teaching qualifications

During year 2006-2007 Miia Halme-Tuomisaari designed and executed a project at the Law Faculty, University of Helsinki, to facilitate students whose studies had been prolonged to finalize their master's thesis. The project identified circa 30 students from which around half joined the year-long program which included regular individual mentoring sessions. Students created study targets, which were then discussed and analyzed in individual sessions. Students also shared drafts of thesis texts, which were jointly discussed with the view of assisting them in finalizing. By the end of the project numerous participants had finalized their studies as planned.

In spring 2018 she designed a pilot course module in collaboration with students of anthropology at University of Helsinki, AntroBlogi.fi, and the Network for Applied Anthropology as well as vice-dean Hanna Kuusi and Anthropology tenure track professor Anni Kajanus to orient students toward entering the workforce. The planned pilot includes course work, employer excursions as well as numerous interactive modules including 'reverse application days'. In September 2018 discussions have been opened into possibilities to collaborate with the Aalto University Design Factory. Funding is sought for the pilot from the Faculty of Social Science for it to be realized in the period of 2019-2020.
